A 2,800-Year-Old Flute Plays Its Part in Troy's Story

Archaeologists find the first musical instrument ever unearthed at Troy

Archaeologists digging at the ancient city of Troy, in what is now Turkey, have found a flute made of bone. It is about 2,800 years old.

Troy has been excavated for more than 150 years, and this is the first musical instrument ever found there. It dates to about the time the poet Homer is thought to have composed the Iliad and the Odyssey.

Tech Corner: Five Ways AI Thinks Differently

Chatbots sound smart, but they only predict the next word. One may even answer "France" to a nonsense question.

Marvin's Marvelous Mechanical Museum Reopens

Marvin's, the beloved arcade of old-time machines and wacky games, has a new home in West Bloomfield at Orchard Mall on Orchard Lake Road. The new space is about 14,000 square feet, nearly triple the size of the old Farmington Hills spot, so there is lots more to play with.

A School Named for the Custodian Who Cared

In Aubrey, Texas, a new elementary school will carry the name of Marilyn Hampton, who worked in the district for 39 years. She did more than clean: she bought supplies and helped students study. "Whoever thought a janitor would have a school named after them," she said.
