An Island Turns Off Its Lights to Save Baby Seabirds

Corvo, in Portugal's Azores, goes dark at night so young birds can find the sea

On Corvo, a tiny island in Portugal's Azores, the street lights go out from 9 pm to 4 am on the last five nights of October. The reason is a bird: the Cory's shearwater, a seabird that nests there.

This is when young shearwaters, called fledglings, first leave their nests. They fly at night, and bright lights can confuse them so they land in towns instead of at sea.

The islands hold most of the world's breeding Cory's shearwaters. People there have rescued over 30,000 fledglings since 2015, and all 207 Corvo residents surveyed backed the dark nights.

Detroit Zoo Lights Up for the Holidays

Wild Lights returns to the Detroit Zoo in Royal Oak on select nights from Nov. 21 to Jan. 3. Millions of lights make more than 500 animal and nature displays. Families can try glowing swings, a light-up teeter-totter and a giant light-wall, and Santa visits through Dec. 23. New this year are a 15-minute reindeer show and a virtual-reality adventure. Tickets start at $17 online; kids 2 and up need one.

Guatemala Cooks Up the World's Biggest Salad

Chefs in Guatemala City made a fiambre salad that weighed 4,325.9 pounds, certified by Guinness World Records as the largest ever. Fiambre is a traditional dish for All Saints Day. It held about 4,000 pounds of meat and vegetables, including eggs, corn, peppers and lettuce. Then the crowd got to eat it.
