A Moonless Sky for the Taurid Meteor Shower

Next week's new moon means dark skies for shooting-star fans

The Moon is taking a night off. A new moon arrives early Monday, Nov. 9, so there is no bright moonlight to wash out the sky. That is great news for stargazers, because the Northern Taurid meteor shower peaks right around then. Most sources say its best night is about Nov. 12.

Taurid meteors are slow, bright streaks of light. They happen when Earth plows through a stream of dust left behind by a comet. Each tiny grain burns up high in the air and looks like a shooting star.

The best viewing runs from about Nov. 7 to 12. Pick a dark spot away from street lights, bundle up and lie back. Give your eyes about 20 minutes to adjust. No telescope needed, but clouds can spoil the show.
