Color-Changing Glass Returns After 1,600 Years

The ancient Romans made glass that changes color, and now researchers have made it again. It took about 1,600 years! It is a good reminder that clever inventors from long ago still have secrets to share.

Winnie-the-Pooh Turns 100!

The silly old bear's first stories are a century old, and fans want his first toy to visit home

Hundred Acre Wood fans, grab a pot of honey! Winnie-the-Pooh turns 100 this year. The bear with a very small brain and a very big heart first appeared in stories by author A. A. Milne, and kids all over the world have loved him ever since.

Here is the fun part: the real stuffed toys that inspired the stories still exist. Christopher Robin Milne's original Pooh and his friends live in New York. Now fans in Britain, and even representatives of the royal family, have politely asked if the toys could come back across the ocean, at least for a visit.

Nobody knows yet whether the silly old bear will make the trip. But it is a good reason to read a Pooh story today. Maybe it will be about honey, or about Eeyore's lost tail, or about a very important Expotition.

Free Museum Days Around Metro Detroit

November has lots of free fun for kids. Cranbrook Institute of Science has a free evening on Friday, Nov. 6, from 6 to 10 pm. At Stahls Motors & Music Experience, kids can climb into classic cars, including a DeLorean, on free days starting Nov. 1. The Detroit Children's Museum has free STEM and art stations plus a planetarium show on Saturday, Nov. 28.

Divers Save a Kangaroo Far From Shore

A kangaroo found itself more than a mile from dry land, and a team of divers swam to the rescue. It was a long way from the beach and needed help getting back to safety. The story has a happy ending, and it shows that rescuers come in all shapes, even wearing flippers. Hop, hop, hooray for the dive team!
