Desert Bursts Into Flowers

Rain wakes up sleeping seeds in Chile's Atacama Desert

The Atacama Desert in Chile is one of the driest places on Earth, usually just sand and rock. Right now it is covered with pink, yellow, purple and red flowers: the best show in 30 years.

Why? Record rain this summer soaked deep into the ground and woke up seeds that had waited under the sand for years. Flowers called "lion's claw" and "guanaco's foot" popped up.

Insects, lizards and guanacos (llama cousins) have come to visit. One scientist said it is "as if the desert is awakening."

Tech Corner: A Teen Drives a Robot Under the Sea

Linden Hunter-Pinsky, 14, steered an underwater robot called an ROV to film six kelp forests in California. Kelp is a giant seaweed that sea animals live in. His tip for young scientists: pick a project you love.

Birmingham Lights Its Big Tree Dec. 4

Birmingham's holiday season starts Friday, Dec. 4, at 6 p.m., when a giant tree with more than 40,000 lights glows in Shain Park, with Santa and carolers. That weekend the Winter Markt brings ice sculptures, treats and a Kinderhaus play area for kids.
