This Week in History

On Oct. 18, 1867, the U.S. took ownership of Alaska. Alaska Day celebrates it each year. The price was about two cents an acre, and Alaska is now our biggest state.

Squeeze Me! A Juice Machine Does the Squeezing

At Nino Salvaggio's in Bloomfield, shoppers fill their own bottles with fresh orange juice

There is a new machine at Nino Salvaggio's in Bloomfield, and it is all about oranges. A big wire basket on top is piled high with whole oranges. They drop into the machine, where they are cut in half and squeezed right in front of you. Peek through the window and you can watch the orange halves get pressed!

A sign next to the machine shows how to build your own bottle in four steps. Grab an empty bottle from the rack. Set it under the spout. Hold the push button down until the bottle is full of fresh juice. Then tighten the cap. Each bottle holds 16 ounces and costs $7.99.

The juice is unpasteurized, which means it has not been heated, so it tastes like a just-picked orange. That also means it has to stay cold, so keep it in the refrigerator. Already-filled bottles wait on ice nearby for anyone in a hurry. Would you rather squeeze your own or grab one from the ice?
