A Piece of a Rocket Company for Every Kid?

Elon Musk says he will give one SpaceX share to every child in America next year, but the details aren't out yet

Elon Musk, who runs the rocket company SpaceX, made a big promise on Monday. "Next year, I will give one of my SpaceX shares to every kid in America," he wrote on X. "This will be the first of many." That could mean kids just like you!

A share is a tiny piece of a company. Owning one share of SpaceX would make you the owner of a very small part of the company that builds rockets like the Falcon 9 and Starship. SpaceX started selling shares to the public in June, and at the end of last week one share was worth about $146. When a company does well, its shares can be worth more; when it doesn't, they can be worth less.

There are about 73 million kids under 18 in the United States, so the gift would add up to about $10.7 billion. Mr. Musk hasn't said yet how kids would get their shares, exactly when it will happen, or who counts as a kid, so grown-ups will be watching for the details. What would you do if you owned a piece of a rocket company?
